

Compound Direct Objects

Some sentences have two direct objects.

Example: Casey ate a sandwich and fruit for lunch.

In the example sandwich and fruit are both direct objects of the verb ate. They are connected by the conjunction and. These two direct objects are called compound direct objects.

Write in the blanks below the direct objects for the sentences.

1. Louie called Jason and Dean about the rehearsal.

2. I packed my books, clothes, and computer for the trip.

3. Her father brought her mother some flowers.

4. Mrs. Evans wrote a letter and a postcard to her friends.

5. They made chairs and tables at the factory.

6. Jane eats cereal or oatmeal for breakfast.

7. On Wednesday we rode our bikes to the park.

8. Olivia and Seth cleaned the bedroom, the bathroom, and the garage over the weekend.

Compound Direct Objects

Some sentences have two direct objects.

Example: Casey ate a sandwich and fruit for lunch.

In the example sandwich and fruit are both direct objects of the verb ate. They are connected by the conjunction and. These two direct objects are called compound direct objects.

Write in the blanks below the direct objects for the sentences.

1. Louie called Jason and Dean about the rehearsal.

Jason and Dean

2. I packed my books, clothes, and computer for the trip.

books, clothes, and computer

3. Her father brought her mother some flowers.

flowers.

4. Mrs. Evans wrote a letter and a postcard to her friends.

letter and postcard

5. They made chairs and tables at the factory.

chairs and tables

6. Jane eats cereal or oatmeal for breakfast.

cereal or oatmeal

7. On Wednesday we rode our bikes to the park.

bikes

8. Olivia and Seth cleaned the bedroom, the bathroom, and the garage over the weekend.

bedroom, bathroom, and garage